I know I could do it by dumping the table contents to file, then importing back. The reason I want to do it directly is that I want the data to be XML to allow parsing by other systems. Is there an easy way to do it? A: You can use the FOR XML clause in SQL: SELECT * FROM mytable FOR XML AUTO I've found this page useful with examples. A: Select the column you want to export to XML Create an XML file using the XML out clause INSERT INTO XML_Table (XML) SELECT * FROM Your_Table FOR XML AUTO Edit to add example CREATE TABLE XML_Table (ID int, Data varchar(2)) INSERT INTO XML_Table VALUES (1, 'A'), (2, 'B'), (3, 'C') GO CREATE TABLE My_Table (ID int, Data varchar(2)) GO INSERT INTO My_Table VALUES (1, 'D') GO SELECT ID, Data FROM My_Table FOR XML AUTO GO DROP TABLE My_Table DROP TABLE XML_Table A: For a simple XML file you can use: SELECT * FROM DatabaseName.SchemaName.TableName FOR

XML AUTO I prefer this because it's both a dbo and 09e8f5149f

In the world of Minecraft, you have the ability to build cities, towns, farms, or even an entire universe that is constructed entirely by yourself. Playing the game is all about creating, exploring, and surviving in a hostile world. In other words, you need to craft items that are essential to your survival and maintain your cities to help them grow. Like all the sandbox games, Minecraft is played in a first person perspective, and most of the action happens on the ground. You have the ability to dig down to form a tunnel that will help you travel into the distance and even fight off monsters and various animals that roam the wide world. You can even interact with the environment like you can go on a trip inside a tree stump and use the tree as a swing. If you want to manage your Minecraft world more efficiently, then it is time to download Minecraft Java Launcher. There are many reasons why you
