In 1980, when I was in 8th grade, I wrote a paper for our history class about the first shot fired in the interstellar conflict that would leave mankind earthbound. I thought it was a minor contribution to human history, but what I didn't see was the larger picture that I was seeing. I wasn't connected to the larger conflict, there was no one aware of what I was doing, but I had changed the course of mankind's future. After the nuclear destruction of the old Earth, the denizens of Earth were forced to develop the technology to travel to other habitable planets. I was the first person to plant the seed of the railgun in mankind's collective brain. The railgun I conceived of as a single piece of metal long enough to aim the projectile, no larger than a human finger and able to accelerate the projectile to nearly half the speed of light. Although I wanted only peace and sent my invention to others, mankind would not be spared, and the first shots of the nearly forgotten second interstellar war were fired with the Russian railgun and pulverized city on the Moon. Odder than any war, this conflict was fought with insects. The insects born from the splattered soil of the Moon, irradiated by the nuclear missiles, and infected by the radionucleotides that remain from the bombardment. Since the second war, humanity has been forced into constant war due to the unearthly infestations that they cannot control and the galactic terraforming programs that have rendered the once beautiful and fertile planets sterile. Now, in present day, you are part of a self-defense squad created to deal with the new crop of insectoids with the railguns that fire tiny missiles that go beyond the speed of light. As an officer in the militia, you're on a mission of peace, taking out the already-saturated mecha and exterminating any approaching insects that pose a threat. GameplayA17: Haunting at Rybalka Lodge \(PFRPG\) In this horror adventure, you're playing the part of a new recruit in the militia, your mission is to go to the Rybalka Lodge to investigate a report of a group of bikers terrorizing a local strip club, with the intention to extort some money from the owner. This is a relatively uneventful trip for you, but the closer you get to the nightclub, the more you can't help

FB: Mercados: published:23 Feb 2018 views:886476 THE CITY OF CHAINS UPDATE: DATE SET!! - New gameplay, new techniques, side-quests - all dating back to where we started our journey! ENJOY! Sorry... The Giza Plateau was the place where civilization on the Nile river began to blossom. The city of Giza was the first capital of the united nation. With the rise of the central government, the importance of the capitol, Giza, increased by power and credit. It became the center of the civilization and the world. A civilization that was influential and fond of knowledge, believing that to know the nature is to have the power over it. The central government became strong through the knowledge of the high priests and priests. Their power was great, but their knowledge was limited. If the civilization was to progress, it needed to be led by someone who knew more than the high priests and priests combined. This is how the first God-King was chosen, granting the owners of Giza Plateau greater influence than any other civilization. Their role became to decide if a civilization was ready and its time had come to be led by a God-King. In a time where technology was limited, God-Kings became an important means to lead the other Kings to the end goal. They would lay down the tech to the King of Kings. The God-Kings would have the power to decide who would rule the civilization after them. The Gods were worshipped as statues, but their true form still remains unknown. God-King of Kings: The Unknown King. King of Kings

What's new:

Completes its First Year of Support We've had a chance to listen to our first full year of community support for the Tower-combat puzzle-platform game Tangerine Dreams! Congratulations to the members of our community that have supported our Kickstarter project this year! Each of you has played a small part in helping such a wonderful project to move into its first year in support. As you can see in the above audio clip, our weekly development updates to backers provided us with some great news. In case you haven't heard what's happening in the world of Tower Defenses this week, I'm going to give you the bare-bones summary of the highlights. Tangerine Dreams continues to progress. As you already know we're adding new levels, new art and music, new gameplay modes, and all the other features that make up the core of our game. You've been receiving new updates every few days, but you will understand why we want to get these major releases out as soon as possible when you hear the level as we've completed it. Couple that with the work put in by our main developers (shout out to Kim for his regular developer updates) to make the community integration a reality, and you have a great platform from which we can release these core updates. First, we'd like to pass on our deepest thanks to all the backers of our campaign: we wouldn't have had this kind of support without you. As you've seen from our updates, we appreciate each and every one of you. Thanks to your support, we're able to fund future updates to this project and keep pushing it forward. New Updates In the last days, we've received two sweet compliments for the development in Tower Defense. The first one was the feedback we've received on the sound effects for an upcoming story level. Having already worked with our sound designer, John Dolman, on several prototypes, we got your comments on Tangerine Dreams: we've always known that we wanted to improve the sound effects, and your feedback has helped guide our direction. Those changes are now implemented and will be updated in this latest upcoming update. Thank you for the kind comments on our website and on Twitter, and we'll try to be sure to keep you updated on new developments and improvements to the game. The
